Carol Ann Waugh

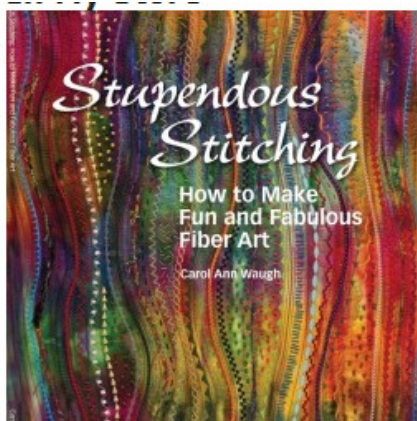

How Do I Get Here From There? June 13– Free Lecture

“Unique” is a description often overused in the art world, but in my case, the motivation to be stretching toward new and original outcomes is always an underlying factor in my work. The compulsion to be different began more than 30 years ago when I tackled my first quilt, and immediately realized traditional patterns were not going to work for me, so I created my own. Those early days of learning to work with fabric have given way to experimentation and curiosity that always seems to be the driving force behind my art.

My inspiration often comes from the endless question: “What can I do to take this piece somewhere new, somewhere different than others have gone before?” I typically begin a new piece with many drawings and sketches as well as a desire to try a new process or work with interesting materials.
